Giorgio Caporaso offers an Italian outlook on eco-friendly design

15.04.2013

A new name will join the list of designers invited to the international Home Show MACEF Russia 2013. Giorgio Caporaso follows such popular trend as eco-friendly design based on efficient use of materials and renewable sources of energy. A collection of furniture made of refined cardboard – one of his latest works – dismantles the stereotype about the use of processed raw materials.

"My design is the result of experimentation and research into materials, their strength and their aesthetic qualities and sensory" – said Giorgio Caporaso – "More than just furniture; they are real systems, as they can enrich and evolve over time with new elements and components. My commitment is to create objects that you can adapt, reuse and recycle, disassembly and reassembly, as well as to use different materials, coupled together, highlight each other creating special sensory situations. This is a so-called "eco-logical contamination".

Giorgio Caporaso will be involved into Design Gallery showcase, where designers will present to the industry experts their activities through the display of products already in production and prototypes in search of potential manufacturers.
